Fontana Named One of the Nation's 100 Best Communities for Young People By America's Promise Alliance and ING

Competition Recognizes Communities Taking Action to Help Reduce Local Dropout Rates and Create Brighter Futures for Young People

Fontana, Calif.—The efforts of Fontana civic and community leaders were honored today when America's Promise Alliance (the Alliance), the nation's largest partnership organization dedicated to youth and children, announced the city had been named a winner of the Alliance's 100 Best Communities for Young People (100 Best) competition presented by ING, a global financial services company and leading provider of retirement plans and programs for teachers. Its 2010 recognition marks the second win for Fontana in the competition.

The 100 Best designation recognizes those communities that make youth a priority by implementing programs that help keep children in school and prepare them for college and the 21st century workforce. The competition is open to all communities that make children and youth a priority, including small towns, large cities, counties and school districts. In addition to enhancing local educational opportunities, most winning communities have taken steps to facilitate improved access to health care for its young people, encourage youth civic engagement and supply developmental resources that create better places for young people to live and grow. The entire 2010 list of 100 Best Communities for Young People and their accomplishments can be found at www.americaspromise.org/100Best.

“Through its innovative and far-reaching programs, Fontana is taking bold and effective steps to help their young people graduate and lead healthy, productive lives,” said Marguerite W. Kondracke, America's Promise Alliance president and CEO. “Fontana serves as an example to inspire and educate other communities across the nation to tackle the challenges facing their city and children, and to implement initiatives that give them the essential resources they need to succeed in life.”

Fontana was again named one of the nation's 100 Best because of the city's “all hands on deck” approach to giving its young people the resources and services needed to lead dynamic and fulfilled lives. Through efficient and productive collaborations between the city government, schools, community leaders and organizations such as the Boys & Girls Club, Fontana's young people are given a voice, leadership skills, healthy activities and job training to set them up for success.

The new $65 million Lewis Library and Technology Center is the culmination of the community's youth-focused efforts. At the Center, students receive personal attention and assistance with assignments, increased classroom resources, better and equal access to education and a safe place to learn and become empowered. Additionally, the Fontana After School Program Coalition brings businesses, nonprofits, hospitals, fitness centers and schools together to provide at-risk and latch-key children with engaging afterschool activities, sports and physical fitness, help with homework and a healthy snack. Students hone their leadership skills with the Mayor's Youth Advisory Council which gives them a voice in policy decisions and places them in the driver's seat when addressing youth issues.

Mayor Frank Scialdone is extremely pleased with the recognition stating, "The City of Fontana is proud to be chosen by America's Promise Alliance and ING as one of the Nation's 100 Best Communities for Young People. This is Fontana's second recognition, the first being in 2008. Being chosen in two consecutive nationwide competitions for this prestigious honor is a testament to our community's commitment to young people and our willingness to go the extra steps to ensure that they develop into the future leaders of our society. As Mayor for the City of Fontana, I cannot thank enough the Fontana Unified School District Board of Education and their staff for their commitment to partner with the City of Fontana as well as with our many non-profit organizations in the city to ensure a safe, positive and nurturing environment in which our youth can blossom into future leaders."

On September 21, 2010, Fontana and the other winners spanning 37 states were recognized at a ceremony in front of the Washington Monument on the National Mall in Washington, D.C. Each of the winning communities was formally recognized with a designation on a map of the U.S., illustrating the geographic and demographic diversity of the winning 100 communities. In addition to the 100 Best distinction, Fontana and the other top communities will receive two road signs identifying the city as one of 100 Best, as well as a trophy to be presented to local officials later this year.

Alliance Chair Alma Powell and President and CEO Marguerite W. Kondracke revealed the list of winners during the national celebration. They were joined by Rhonda Mims, president of the ING Foundation and senior vice president, ING's Office of Corporate Responsibility and Multicultural Affairs and Twilight's Kellan Lutz, who both share a passion for the development of young people.

"ING is committed to children's education and to the advancement of education initiatives that prepare them for successful futures," said Mims. "Our support for 100 Best demonstrates our goal of honoring communities like Fontana that produce real, measurable results for improving the lives of young people."

The competition is one element of the Alliance's Grad Nation campaign, a 10-year initiative to mobilize all Americans to take action in their communities to end the high school dropout crisis and prepare young people for college and the 21st century workforce. More than 7,000 students drop out each school day in the U.S., resulting in 1.3 million young people a year. To help decrease these numbers, the Alliance is more committed than ever to recognizing communities – regardless of size, location or history – that are taking real action to help more young people stay in school and graduate on time.

“100 Best is an essential building block of an inspiring national movement that gives everyone a chance to ensure every young person graduates,” said Powell. “These winning communities refuse to let the challenges they face be the determining factor in the lives of their children and youth. Instead, they are helping to build an infrastructure of assertive, successful and dynamic young people that are the future of this country.”

About 100 Best

First held in 2005, 100 Best honors communities large and small, rural and urban, that are making progress to help young people achieve their potential, which includes earning a high school diploma, securing a good job, and playing an active, productive role in America’s economic vitality. This year, more than 350 communities in 50 states registered online for the 100 Best distinction at www.americaspromise.org/100best.

Being a 100 Best community not only demonstrates commitment to local young people; the award fosters local pride, bolsters economic development and shines the spotlight on the people and programs that are building better communities. The competition also facilitates the sharing of best practices among communities nationwide regarding education, access to health care, reading score improvement, youth service and pre-school enrollment, among many other areas.
